

Bond Project Gives Leeway

School bond programs have overlapped in the past allowing time to pre-plan and carry out many of our construction projects in an orderly manner. However, failure of this bond issue has disrupted our program and now we must stretch our remaining funds to meet the most critical classroom needs.

"If we don't have the funds to build, we cannot keep these people on the job," the deputy superintendent said.

The first layoffs will be made in mid-July and will continue over the next six months. Layoffs during this period will be made as follows:

1. Fifty in the Architectural Design Branch, out of approximately 100 present employees. This includes structural, electrical, civil, draftsmen; mechanical, landscaping engineers; architects; and specification writers.
2. Approximately 100 building craftsmen between now and September and then another 40 in January. This is out of approximately 1500 such employees. Included in this group are carpenters, painters, plumbers and electricians.

City May Release 300

Approximately 300 employees will have to be released from the Los Angeles City Schools' construction division during the next six months because of the failure of Propositions A and B on the June 5 ballot, it was announced last week (July 5) by Deputy Superintendent of Schools Dr. Louise Seyler.

Employees who will be affected by the layoff specifically worked on school bond construction projects and were paid with school funds, Dr. Seyler stated. In a press conference explaining the employment problems facing the school district, she pointed out that a total of 475 employees fall into this classification and there is a possibility that all of these will have to be laid off over the next two years if no further bond funds are approved by district voters.

"The superintendent, his staff and the Board of Education feel badly about these layoffs, but there is only one reason for it and that is the failure of the bond issues," Dr. Seyler said.

Letters

To The Editor:

The Lomita property owners have taken notice of the legal action taken against Los Angeles and other cities due to depreciation of property values by operation of airports. Members of our organization, the Lomita Property Owners and Registered Voters, Association, Inc. have mentioned the possibility of like action against the City of Torrance—Particularly if the expansion of facilities unduly increases noise and danger to local residents.

The proposed touch and go strip is causing considerable apprehension locally.

Also, it has been suggested that if any such action was ever necessary, that the people living in Torrance adjacent to the airport might wish to co-operate.

July Named Rec. Month

The Los Angeles County Department of Parks and Recreation is cooperating with 70 private and public recreation agencies throughout the county in the observance of July as Park and Recreation Month, according to Chairman Ernest E. Debs of the Board of Supervisors.

Theme for the month is "Destination — Family Recreation." A host of special events and activities are geared for family participation throughout the county.

Central personality, during the month, will be Karen Ann Kyeon, 20 year-old recreation leader from Culver City who was selected as Miss Recreation, Queen of Park and Recreation Month.

CED Makes Public Work Of Improving Profits

A program to improve the profits of agriculture without government controls and to establish free markets for farm products was made public here today by the Research and Policy Committee of the Committee for Economic Development (CED).

If vigorously prosecuted over a period of years, the committee said, the program would reduce annual governmental agricultural spending by $3 billion, or about one-half of present Federal farm expenditures.

TB Fight For Drug Continues

Despite many successes in the fight against tuberculosis, the ideal anti-TB has yet to be discovered. Further, there is still great need for research on such basic matters as how and what composes the tubercle bacillus, the germ which causes the disease.

The evaluation comes from Dr. Max Dunn, who retired this month after 40 years with the UCLA chemistry faculty to become vice president and research director of the International Chemical and Nuclear Corp. in the City of Industry.

SEAL GRANT

The National Tuberculosis Association this week renewed a Christmas Seal grant of $13,686 to continue Dr. Dunn's study of the chemistry of the tubercle bacillus. With the help of various research assistants, Dr. Dunn has been working on this elusive problem on NTA grants since 1954, and will continue to supervise the study at UCLA.

"There is still much to be learned on how the bacillus which causes tuberculosis is constructed, and how drugs work upon it," Dr. Dunn says. "After eight years, I can only say that nature and magnitude of the complexity of this problem is more evident now."

Recent drug treatments have proven highly successful in the treatment of tuberculosis, the noted UCLA chemistry professor reports. However, these successes are empirical; that is, they work, but no one knows why. He added that some agents have proven effective against certain strains of TB, but these drugs are widely separated chemically and no one seems to know why they work.

CELL WALL

Specifically, Dr. Dunn's project is concerned with the chemical components of the tubercle bacillus. The cell wall of this bacillus, he points out, is twice as thick as any other such organisms. This is what makes tuberculosis so difficult to treat and is largely responsible for the recent disturbing growth of drug-resistant strains of tuberculosis.

"We are trying to find out the chemical composition of this cell," says Dr. Dunn. "There are only four or five components, including fatty acids and carbohydrates, but there are no proteins, or amino acids."

FIVE TOOLS

"Until recently, there were no fine tools for this work. But advances in technology have given us the isotope paper chronology and other effective tools."

"Obviously, the ideal anti-tuberculosis drug has yet to be found. There must be many more drugs, just as good. Work on newer and better drugs must continue and be intensified."

Dr. Dunn paid particular tribute to his research assistant, Miss Audrey Fowler, for her assistance in this project. Miss Fowler was recently granted a other Christmas Seal fellowship for TB work in other fields.

Long Range Plans Told

Factors which must be taken into account in long-range state fiscal planning range from the normal expansion of government to meet growth needs, through the continuing pressure for new services, the ambitions of particular state agencies, the questions as to revenues available from the existing tax structure, the use of special fund surpluses for general needs, to the cost of borrowing for capital outlays. All these point up the dire need for effective long range planning.

Valid indicators of what the future may hold fall into four main categories: 1. population and changes in its composition; 2. data relating to general economic trends; 3. and data relating to specific trends in some area of service.

Methods of Finding Job Suggested

Now that California schools are out, thousands of young persons are getting set in jobs, according to Director of Employment Irving H. Perluss.

"Last year," he observed, "the Department of Employment placed 40,247 youths under 20 years of age in jobs in June, July and August. It's too early for comparable 1962 statistics, but youth employment needs have been publicized widely, our young persons have much to offer employers, and I'm sure this year's youth placement figures will be equally gratifying."

Perluss continued that many young persons still are seeking employment, while others now on the job will be searching for new employment from time to time as jobs are completed.

GETTING JOB

"Getting a job," the director commented, "is affected by two very important components of the search for work. The first is getting ready for the interview by the employer. The second is the interview itself. And we can be certain a large percentage of young persons being hired right now—as well as job applicants of all ages—are being selected because they did a superior job of getting ready for the interview by the prospective employer, and then put themselves across when interviewed."

There is no secret about either the preparation for or behavior during the interview. In a Department of Employment publication entitled "Tips on Getting a Job," Perluss suggested adherence to the following principles will benefit young men and women when they apply for work.

When getting ready for the interview:

1. Have facts about yourself ready: address, telephone number, social security number.
2. Have necessary papers ready: any permits or licenses you know the job requires, or military discharge if a former service man or woman.
3. Learn as much as you can beforehand about the firm to which you apply, know the product or service it offers, learn something about the kind of jobs you could do for the employer; find out what you can about the employer himself.
4. Take a kit, if you think it will help you show the employer what you can do. Make it attractive. You might include work samples, summary of training and experience, letters of recommendation.
5. In any case, know your own work record; be immediately responsive with names of former employers and addresses, exact dates of former employment, and names of people who know about your work.
6. Be ready to talk about: the kinds of work you have done; your training and experience in relation to the job you are seeking; your school record—favorite subjects, courses in which you got the best grades, outside activities.
7. Personal appearance is important: avoid clothing that is too fancy or too casual; watch your grooming.

POSITIVE ASPECTS

"These," Perluss said, "are the positive aspects of preparing to look for work and conducting oneself in the employment interview. Applicants who keep these points well in mind will enhance their chances of being hired."

An applicant sometimes fails to get the job he seeks, the employment director went on to say, because:

1. His appearance is not suitable for the work he asks for; the wages he asks are unrealistic; he lacks sufficient training for the work; or he has an unbusinesslike attitude or behavior.
2. He asks too many questions about the job, giving the impression of reluctance to do the work; he shows extreme nervousness; he fails to show up for an interview at the appointed time; or he takes a second person with him when looking for the job.
3. He shows an unfriendly manner. (A person can be businesslike and at the same time evidence dignified friendliness.)

Budget Process To Go Automated

Signs are in the sky that our California state budgetary process may go largely automated before too many years. Last year the Assembly ways and means committee authorized the development of a long range program for the functioning of state government and for budget by a well-known firm of governmental administration specialists. The firm has submitted a tentative draft of recommendations, which will be reviewed by the committee in the near future.

The committee was informed that the cost of state government will increase steadily in years to come, not only because there will be more people, but because all the people will require more services and facilities. Further inflation will also increase it, but costs in specific areas may decrease because of improved administration or cutting back of obsolete services. The means of financing the cost may, or may not keep pace with the need.

REPUBLICAN STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Charles Edward Chapel, Republican member of the Assembly, 46th District, California State Legislature, has announced the appointment of five members of the 1962-1964 Republican State Central Committee.

The appointees, who take office immediately, are Mrs. Julie S. Ayres, 700 Avenue "D," Redondo Beach; Mrs. Dorothy D. Natland, 18 Crest Road, Rolling Hills; Mrs. Theodora K. Ryall, 8307 Creighton Ave., Los Angeles 45 (Westchester); Warren S. Parr Jr., 4208 Via Pinzon, Palos Verdes Estates; and Harry S. Adams, 332 Avenue "F," Redondo Beach.

In addition to these five, Assembly man Chapel is also a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS

Chapel also stated each member of the Republican State Central Committee named above has the authority to appoint four associate members, one of whom must be under 30 years of age. The names of the associate members will be announced before August 1.

The Republican State Central Committee will meet at the State Capitol in Sacramento on August 4 and August 5, in accordance with California election laws, beginning at 10 p.m. each day. The adoption of the 1962 Republican state platform and the election of officers of the state committee will be the principal accomplishments of the new committee in Sacramento on August 4 and 5.

Crash Program Effective Say Local Law Officials

Law enforcement and civic officials of Centinela Valley-South Bay cities agreed Monday that a crash program to quell juvenile violence has had positive and encouraging effects.

The program, formulated early last month at an emergency meeting called by Supervisor Kenneth Hahn, includes strict enforcement of 10 p.m. curfew laws and increased activity in the area by the County Probation Department.

Torrance police reported the curfew crackdown is getting the juvenile off the street at time when he is most apt to get into trouble. Wade Peebles, city manager, said the overall program has been "very beneficial."

PARENTS TAKE HEED

Mayor Ralph Dorsey of Manhattan Beach stressed: "Rigid enforcement of the 10 p.m. curfew has made the parents take heed as well as the juveniles." He suggested the strict enforcement continue.

Compton Mayor Del Clawson, who helped plan the crash program, was out of the city this week. Compton Police Captain Harold Lindemulder reported that "Compton is continuing its program of strict curfew enforcement and monthly conferences with civic groups."

City Administrator Walter Hahn of Inglewood said the program has "worked out fine throughout the community."

highly recommend the long-range program to insure the future."

Hawthorne Mayor Raymond Creal and Police Chief Harry P. Severns agreed the program has been "very effective."

"If we can continue to reach the young adults and parents with a firm attitude of discipline, much of our problem will be solved," said Mayor Creal.

"We are now in a position to look to the long-range program through school officials, community leaders, and the Youth Canteen center which this city recently opened," he added.

Severns pointed to "strong indications that parents are starting to wake up and keep aware of where their children are and who they are with." He pointed out that since the crash program began, there have been several calls from parents in Hawthorne asking what they can do to control area youngsters.

PROGRAM INCLUDES

The long-range program includes:

1. Initiating closer cooperation between police authorities, school administrators and the probation department for the exchange of information on juvenile gangs.
2. Enlisting the active participation and backing of community coordinating councils and other civic groups to make parents aware of their responsibilities.
3. An education program, utilizing films and school programs, to emphasize standards of personal conduct for teenagers in our democratic way of life, and the vital need for respect of other persons and their property.

FULFILLED PURPOSE

Civic authorities agreed with Hahn that the crash program had fulfilled its purpose, but several emphasized there is no reason to "slaken up" on enforcement because teenage problems have subsided.

"Firmness will still be the rule," Hahn noted.

"Now is the time to begin the long-range program to really get at the root of teenage trouble."

"This, too, must be a cooperative effort within the entire district to insure maximum effectiveness," Hahn emphasized.

CHANGES SITUATION

"The crash program has certainly changed the seriousness of the situation here," reports Lawndale Mayor Thomas Thorpe. "I
